

HEADLINERS

1997

A grilling today from the voters of tomorrow

Children's Express interviews London candidates prior to the 1997 General Election.

A working mum is just the job, say children

Children's Express examines the pros and cons of being raised by a high flying mother.

Bored to bytes

Primary school pupils reveal their attitudes to computers

Dine out on stories of school cooking

Primary school pupils give the lowdown on their school dinners.

Educational TV can be fun too

Young people give their views on educational TV

Exclusion: What the students think

Children's Express investigates the use of exclusion in school

First day worries on moving up

Children talk about their fears of starting secondary school.

Having money makes you feel independent

Young journalists from Children's Express show that exercising their spending power goes far beyond the local sweet shop.

Homework: what they're saying on the classroom floor

Children's Express members discuss the government's new initiative on homework.

Honesty is the best policy with youth

Children's Express interviews Islington candidates for the 1997 General Election.

I want to be a worm

Primary school pupils discuss their school plays.

Inside Children's Express

It's about time that newspaper stories about children gave them a proper say in the way they're presented, say reporters from the news agency Children's Express.

Investigation of Lottery retailers

Supermarkets and newsagents still break the law by selling National Lottery tickets to under-16s nearly 18 months after an investigation by a children's news agency showed how simple it was for young people to purchase them.

Its not just the thought that counts

Parents who think light of kids' strategies for getting presents are in for a hard time, warn young reporters from Children's Express.

Karates great, but give Cubs the chop

Two primary school pupils talk about their after-school clubs.

Kids send me off my trolley

A visit to a London supermarket reveals a very different picture of family shopping to the one normally seen in television advertising.

Love and lust: fears and gossip from the playground

Young people discuss the sex education they receive at school - and suggest it falls well short of what's required.

Love to see you

Two primary school pupils discuss the trials and tribulations of the opposite sex.

My best lesson

Young people discuss what they like about their favourite lessons

Playground politicians

Children's Express members give their views on politics

Pupils grill the politicians

Children's Express reporters cross-examine the education spokespeople ahead of 1997's General Election

Pupils use UN law in fight to save school

Children fighting plans to close their comprehensive school say that they have a right to be consulted under international law.

Read all about it

Children offer their thoughts on the joys - or not - of reading, as the government announces plans to boost literacy in schools.

Schools expel, but pupils excel

Children's Express speaks to teenagers who have been excluded from school

Shopkeepers are bang out of order

An investigation which appeared in the Highbury and Islington Express about underage children buying fireworks.

Show of commitment

With school music's popularity waning, what drives young players and how can the trend be reversed? Children's Express reporters went backstage at this year's Schools Proms to find out.

Someone to watch over me

The director of the British Board of Film Classification speaks of his concerns about what children should be allowed to view.

Teenagers work out the best source of job advice

Three school-leavers tell of their search for useful guidance about careers - and give grades to their various advisers.

The wrong trousers

Pupils discuss the good and bad points of school uniforms.

This place is jumping

Two primary school pupils reveal the highs and lows of PE lessons.

This Working Life

Reporters from Children's Express spent a day applying for jobs to test levels of pay and working conditions.

Warning: children will be persecuted

Children's Express members argue that treating schoolkids like shoplifters is counter-productive

We want more

Primary school pupils say homework's all right by them.

Young people and vegetarianism

Young people from Children's Express talk about the problems they face if they decide to become vegetarians.

Built on Cubik
©2012 Headliners

Registered Charity Number 1043300. Supported by the Department for Children, Schools and Families